Statement of Significance

Last updated on - July 20, 1999

What is significant?

The Former Eastern Hill Hotel, originally known as the Belvidere Hotel, was most likely designed by Joseph Burns and constructed c1854-1856 for Thomas McClelland. The classical facade of the three storey rendered brick building remains almost exactly as it was when built. Alterations to the hotel in 1866 and 1877 seem to have affected the rear and interior. While the ground and first floor interiors have been substantially altered over the years, the third floor retains a largely intact 19th century layout.

How is it significant?

The Former Eastern Hill Hotel is of historical and architectural significance to the State of Victoria.

Why is it Significant?

The Former Eastern Hill Hotel is of historical significance as one of only a small number of gold-rush era hotels to survive in Victoria and for its associations with the Victorian Eight Hour Day movement. The Former Eastern Hill Hotel is one of the largest and most intact of the few remaining 1850s gold rush era hotels left in inner Melbourne. As such it provides important evidence of the impact of the gold rushes on Melbourne's development. In 1856 and subsequent years the building provided the venue for many functions and meetings concerned with, and allied to, the eight hour day movement. The building unionists supporting the eight hour day, who used the hotel as their headquarters, were known as belviderites. The eight hour movement played a very significant role in the early industrial and political history of the colony, and of Australia, and is still celebrated by the union movement.

The Former Eastern Hill Hotel is of architectural significance as one of the most substantial, elegant and externally intact remaining hotels of the early 1850s and for its connections with two prominent early Victorian architects, Joseph Burns and A.F. Kursteiner. Burns seems likely to have been the original architect. The hotel is a valuable representative example of his extensive hotel work from the gold rush period. The renovations from 1866 and 1876 were the work of A.F. Kursteiner, who was also responsible for several other buildings in Fitzroy, most notably the precinct of 33 single and double storey workers houses in Greeves Street Fitzroy, a most unusual example of 19th century speculative development.
